Book Description

'The Matrix of Evil' is a fantasy book based on the allegorical roles of its characters. In essence, it shows us that there are no respectable people of unimpeachable integrity, but only "people" made from water and soil. There will always be a temptation, no matter what form this will take, to entice and cloud human judgement. Man tends to turn his wishes and dreams into obsessions and "prisons." Dazzled by mania, he becomes vulnerable to all kinds of "reconciliation," in his attempt to achieve his goal. Failing to assess the happiness he already possesses, he is fighting a losing battle. Yet, only by steeping himself into his past, and comparing "before" and "after," can he remember his superior nature, and cement his will and faith. These are the spiritual stages of the enlightened ones. When Man is equipped with the necessary strength and knowledge to deal with himself, he realizes that he has never been on his own, and rediscovers his true spiritual origins. This time, Man must only discover and revel in what life has to offer, in order to return to his point of departure: the self. Then, life becomes a miracle. We all are co-creators. We build our paradise or hell by our own hands. We do this by giving our strength to faith or to fear. We choose the world we want to live even if we don't want to admit it. What we call "free will" is the greatest gift to human kind and also a powerful instrument which can make the universe listen and help us achieve our wishes and
